Subject: Microsoft Settlement

While I am normally an extreme pacifist, I am finding it very difficult to not feel angered by this proposed settlement to the Microsoft case. I have followed the case against Microsoft for years, since the monopoly it holds over desktop operating systems impacts my work on a daily basis. To find that the proposed remedy contains almost no controls over the future practices of a company that has twice been convicted of illegal actions seems shocking. That there are no punishments included in this makes me wonder why it is called a 'remedy' for the illegal things they were convicted of doing. How can this be? I urge you to reconsider this proposed remedy, and to find a solution that does actually punish Microsoft for what it has done, and draw some guidelines to regulate how it operates in the future.

Thank you,
